of Texas, sojourning in Mississippi to settle up his affairs—a Jim Crow jumper in and out of all parties, and an insatiate seeker of office from all in turn. We presume he is rummy as elector, merely for relaxation from the labor of settling his affairs previous to his return to the single-stare republic.

Here is his advertisement, taken from the Austin Gazette:

HUTCHINSON & FOOTE, PARTNERS IN THE PRACTICE OF LAW.

A HUTCHINSON has opened an office in Congress Avenue, near the Capitol, in Austin, and H. S. Foote will, for a short period, remain in Mississippi to close the business of the partners there.

The firm may be addressed at Austin, Texas, or Jackson, Miss.

Austin, Aug. 11th. 1840.

Next and last is ANDREW HAYS, Esq., familarly known in Tennessee, some years ago, as "old Andy Hays," a rank old Federalist, and one of the bitter enemies to Gen Jackson's first election, and whom our recollection's eyes as, never supported him in any thing but the Proclamation.

What a combination!—thread-bare bufflooney from Tennessee, a gadacumen from Texas, and rank old federalism steward down into mod in d mocracy, from "Vergreenash." If our southern neighbors can swallow such a dose as this, they must have the palates of hyenas and the stomachs of ostriches.

Skeptic spate that book,
Touch not a single leaf,
Nor on its pages look
With eye of UNBELIEF;
'Twas my forefathers say,
In the hour of agony:
Sceptic go thy way,
And let that old book be.

That dear old book of life,
For centuries has stood;
Unharm'd amid the strife,
When all the earth was drunk [with blood;

And would'st thou harm it now
And have its truths forgot?
Sceptic forbear thy blow, Thy hand should harm it not.

Its very name recalls,
The hours of early youth,
When in my Fathers hall,
I heard its tales of truth;
Their traces linger still,
And dear they are to me, Sceptic forego thy will,
And let that old book be
