The gratification of their appetites made them the more ravenous; the most disgusting of all men are those prostituted their offices in the vilest manner to destroy the character of Gen. Harrison but who now, as he is the rising sun to worship him, in the hope of re-occupying the places they have disgraced. The veneration of the N. Y. Evening Post particularly notices this class of office-seekers in the following letter:

Correspondence of the N. Y. Ev. I
 WASHINGTON CITY, Dec. 20

The city swarms with a band of Saxon, Anglo-American and Anglo-bond Condottieri office hunters and rascals, who are annoying every respectable man with their importunities, and like Lazaroni of Naples, they beg, not for macaroni, but for commissions of Gen. Harrison, to be laid before the mighty of the North Bend, that great dispend of light and office and glory.

If the city already swarms with the vermin, what may not be expected before the advent of the "Ides of March." Long before that period shall have passed, every nook in the place will be crowded with greedy expectants; and those who are then mere lookers-on in the American Metropolis, will witness a spectacle as ridiculous and disgusting.

If those who are here now, and those yet to come were "honorable men" of that class which rallied around Harrison, in the year 1836; and retained his steadfast advocates to the last, they would escape abhorrence. Such however is not the fact; and it is with deep mortification that I state that many of them were, not months ago, the professed friends and associates of Mr. Van Buren. When I left the city in the latter part of July, not boasting of their ancient democracy when I spoke in defence of the admission, they turned up their legitimately exclusive democratic noses, and said though I was undoubtedly sincere in my attachments, I was not of the "first water." Many gentlemen since that time have come over the spirit of their day.

—I had a dream which was not all a dream and by some accountable and undefined cause, have suddenly been transformed into intimate worshippers of the hero of Bend.

On my arrival here at an early hour in November, I met some of these patriotic disinterested gentlemen, and kindly thought rendered them my sympathies; I regretted that the adverse results of the election might possibly be the means of being discharged from office.
