

alone for success, upon his determination to devote his time and humble abilities, to both the mechanical and editorial departments. The Politics of the Conservative, will, of course remain the same, eo nomino.

That which he thinks the welfare of the society and country in which he lives, will be boldly, but decorously advocated. He will never subserve his paper to blind partisan purposes; but, will be in decided opposition to the one, and in devoted advocacy of the other political party, as they at present exist in our Government. As much as we are opposed to a blind adoration of all party men, and measures, we at the same time firmly believe, that the existence of parties is essential to the correct administration of a free Government.

When vigilantly watched, and not worshipped with an Eastern devotion, it is the only ground upon which the public mind can be balanced, where a people are so immediately the sources of all power—as they are under republican institutions.—The undersigned, not intending to flinch from the imperative duties which devolve upon him in such a situation, would say, that he believes the course pursued by many Whig Papers of this country, towards the Democratic Party in a degree unjustifiable, and altogether unnecessary.—and the disposition of a number of his brethren to identify those of the opposite party, who have abused public confidence, with the party aggregate, he disapproves. Tho' when—men or measures, by their relation to, or communion with the public welfare, become the legitimate subjects of praise or censure, he will take the liberty which his duty insures him, of noticing them as they deserve.

The undersigned is also aware that newspapers for the last few years, have been so exclusively devoted to political subjects, that they have, not only, become in a great degree irksome, in their details, but are in many instances unfit to be read by any but the wildest adherents of party, or the blindest votaries of the doctrine of political magnetism. He will therefore strive to furnish something for the eye of the agriculturist, the economist, the moralist, the poetic, and the mirthful, together with the politician; and tho' it may be but a taste at a time, yet we estimate it particularly proper that all classes of readers, should be attended to cleverly.—With this course marked out,

SPECULATIONS

From an investigation of a committee appointed for the purpose of investigating the operations of the U. S. Bank of Louisville, it appears that Messrs. Biddle & Jourdan, have borrowed immorally, and liquidated them by paying stock, such as Vicksburg, &c. It is learned that to curtail the expenses of the war, have been discharged.

From the Louisville Journal THE NEW PRESIDENT.—It is reported to go on at Washington as if HARRISON had not died. It is a probability, to be no change in consequence of Mr. Harrison's resignation to the Presidency. The National Intelligencer, a paper of the Baltimore Patriot, writes with deep interest:

By the extraordinary death of the official intelligence President, at Williamsburg, Virginia, patch by him in repairing to the Government, John Tyler, now Vice President of the UNITED STATES, arrived in Washington on Monday morning, at 5 o'clock, at the residence of Mr. Tyler at Brown's Hotel.
