ROMANCE OF REAL LIFE.

"Some years ago," says a foreign journal, a captain of a Cosair carried off the wife of a poor woodcutter, residing in the neighborhood of Messina. After detaining her several months on board his vessel, he led her on an island in the South seas, wholly regardless of what might befall her. It happened that the woman was presented to the savage monarch of the island, who became enamored of her. He made her his wife, placed her on the throne, and at his death left her sole sovereign of his dominions. By a European vessel, which recently touched at the island, the poor woodcutter received intelligence of his wife. She told him presents of such vast value that he will probably be one of the wealthiest private individuals in Sicily, until it shall please her Majesty, his august spouse, to summon him to court.

TRIUMPH OF TRUTH OVER PARTY SPIRIT.

It is gratifying to witness the unanimity with which the press opposed to General Harrison, during the late Presidential contest, do justice to his memory now that he is dead. It shows that although party spirit may darken and disturb the surface of society, the spring of its source is still pure and rapid—Those presses which were most loud and most vehement in their opposition to Gen. Harrison's election, now seem to outdo his most ardent supporters in eulogizing his merits as a soldier and a man, and his virtues as a republican and a statesman. Now that his spirit has passed away, and that the honesty of his actions, and the purity of his motives are no longer obscured by the clouds of political partizanship, it is conceded by all parties that he was brave in the field, when battling against the foes of his country, and in the councils of the nation, wisdom and justice were the impulse which directed his action, that on a foreign mission his country's interests were never sacrificed nor lost sight of, and that in all the duties which devolved on him, as an American citizen, he was a model after which men might probably copy. All seem to join in saying:

Peace to the just man's memory—let it grow greener with years, and blossom through the flight of ages—let the mimic canvass show its calm, benevolent features—let the light stream on his deeds of love that shunned the sight of fall but Heaven, and, in the book of fame, let the glorious record of his virtues write, and hold it up to men, and bid them claim a palm like his, and catch from him the hallowed flame."—[Picayune.
