

SIGNERS OF THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

Whatever may be the state of parties in this country, and however diversified, all unite in homage and gratitude to the noble band of patriots and statesmen who proclaimed Independence on the 4th of July, 1776. The 65th anniversary of that illustrious deed having just passed, we have thought proper to refresh the memory of our readers with a list of the immortal Signers. More out of curiosity than for any other purpose we have placed their respective ages at the time of signing, and also the year of their deaths, opposite their names. The thirteen original States, with their delegates, are stated as they appear in the fac simile draught of the Declaration.—Tusca. Monitor.

of such paramount importance do we consider the settlement of the land question, proposed by the bill, that we would have voted for it, upon its own merits, independently of any other measure whatever.

Yesterday, the House took up the bill for supplying the present wants of the Treasury, and went to work upon it as if it did not mean to take as much time to pass it as it took to pass the land bill.—Nat. Int.
