THE HON. JACOB,

Not him of the long ladder, but Jacob Thompson, regaled such of our good citizens as waded to the court house through the mud on Tuesday night last, with a regular "out-and-out" locofoco speech, which it would have gladdened the hearts of Slamm, Bang, Ming & Co. to have listened to, it was so like their own The modest orator was much moved with pity for the poor whigs, whose generous, unsuspecting confidence he described as having been most foully betrayed by the men they had placed in power. "Where," he asked, "is that prosperity which was prom-high--than the miserable and shameful—I will abstain from harsher epithets, however they may be merited—the miserable and shameful attempt was conceived to make material for party contest out of the appropriation to pay the expenses of his funeral! an attempt which every human being with one feeling of humanity or honor in his bosom, must have turned with loathing and abhorrence."

The next grievance complained of, was, that all the officers removed under the present administration had been proscribed purely for opinion's sake, and that all those who had been appointed to office, were those who had performed services for the whig party in the last canvass! He somehow omitted to state that a great number of office holders, during the late contest, were using their official influence for partisan purposes, and that for such cause, and not merely "for opinion's sake," they were dismissed from office. But he is apt to forget such little things as these.

The last effort of the loco foco candidate was expended on the bond question. He was impressively solemn while on that subject. He depicted in glowing colors the danger to which our liberties will be exposed if we pay the bonds, the importance of our refusing to pay them, if we wish to court favor among other nations. It was, he said, "a question of honesty," and it would not be honest to pay the bonds. After such a fashion talked the Hon. Jacob, until he chose to forbear further infliction, when his speech was 'damned with faint praise' and the audience dispersed to seek the society of Monsieur Marpheus.

MR. THOMPSON

In his speech on Tuesday night last, stated that the present administration had proscribed more officers for opinions-sake, than all former administrations, and that Mr Granger was turning them out at the rate of 130 per week.—Let facts speak for themselves: In the House of Representatives on the 25th of August, Mr Briggs laid before Congress the following facts, which we copy from the National Intelligencer

MR. EDITOR:

Prepared as I was, despotic or arbitrary or seen with surprise his of advice or proclamation, and directing the county officers, in the discharge of their official duties, arguing upon the constitution and laws, by repealing some of the provisions, and directing others in their place, by a entirely different mode of turns in senatorial or judicial that clearly pointed out usurping, and attempting to usurp the executive, which is alone by the constitution, I look to a high degree, presumption to the State and county, in the discharge of their duties, saying to them you have no intelligence to understand yourselves, as despotic in your where given but express the constitution.

Among other unjust powers, he attempts to prolong the tenure of my office, and as judge of the 8th judicial circuit issued his edict that I was dismissed, for the term of my meaning thereby, not the term prescribed by the constitution, but a destructive balance of a term of election in 1837. He has in November next, continued the constitution and a circuit Court, which upon argued and submitted to the Errors and Appeals in a decision of said court, was requested of Gov. McNutt to have an opportunity of presenting in favor of his view of the

After some three months the patience of the judiciary exhausted he declined submitting to the court, but instead of a decision, which he well knew would have fallen upon him, he immediately returned in which he argues the case upon it; and directs the court to give judgment. This, appears to be a case of usurpation and despotism, and is not to be tolerated in any executive office.
