should have a threefold tendency—condensed form, such valuable true incidents as are embodied in it viewed,—to direct the reader's attention that deserve to be read—and to waste time and money upon that which merit only to be burned. In indications, that by their variety and variety and overwhelm every undiscerning, impartial criticism, govern just mentioned, is one of the most indispensable of auxiliaries to him to discriminate.

Essays and tales, having in view amusement, or both—Historical Sketches of events too minute to elucidate it, and heightening its value by being regarded as forming the stay of our country. And of indigenous poetry, enough sometimes of no mean strain—to cultivate the growing poetical taste of our country.

The times appear, for several reasons, such a work—and not one alone, but the public mind is feverish and irritable, and political strifes.—The soft, and soothing of Literature is needed, to allude and soothe that irritation. Vice is going abroad;—They should be rebuked, or lashed by ridiculing haunts. Ignorance lords it over the proportion of our people:—Every set in motion, to arouse the enlightened, to increase their number; so that the popular government may no longer be enveloped in a dark, and over the destinies of our country. And to accomplish all these ends, an efficient agent can be employed, than the plan of the Messenger; if that out in practice?

The south peculiarly requires such all the Union, south of Washington, two Literary periodicals! North there are probably at least twenty; this contrast justified by the wealth of the native talent, or the actual of the Southern people compared with Northern? No, for in wealth, talent may justly claim at least an equality; and a domestic institution of our own, beyond all doubt affords twice the leisure for reading and they enjoy.

It was from a deep sense of that the word Southron was the name of this periodical; and north of this periodical; and not with nourish local prejudices, or to deal in local interest. Far from any such the editor's fervent wish, to see the silken bands of mutual kindness. Far from meditating hostility to has already drawn, and he has drawn, much of his choicest material, happy indeed will he deem his pages, by making each region battle, contribute in any essential to the lowering clouds that so the peace of both, and to brighten the sacred ties of fraternal love.

The Southern Literary Messenger nearly completed its seventh year south year. How far it has acted here uttered, is not for the editor believes, however, that it falls of them, than human weakness. Practice fall short of Theory.
