

A MONEY-COUNTER MOVEMENT

One of the causes of the late great depression of Alabama is without doubt to be traced to the operations of the money counter movement. The money counter movement has been held at which resolutions were passed with great unanimity, condemning the measures of the previous meeting expressing unshaken confidence in the banks to redeem all their liabilities, and ultimately their circulation. The meeting resolved to take the notes of the Alabama business transactions, and urge who composed the first meeting public withdrawal from the pledge. The meeting also avowed its support the State in imposing a tax on all her contracts, without reliance on the nominal profits arising from — Memphis Engr.

At his residence in this place, on the 11th of August next, after a protracted and painful illness, CHARLES BOWEN, Esq. in the 51st year of age; leaving a wife and large family, and extensive circle of acquaintances to mourn their irreparable loss. He was a man of unblemished character, whose life was a model to his contemporaries. He was not one who in his retirement sought to fix the gaze and admiration of the multitude; for, being retired in his private life, his ambition was not directed to public stations. As a citizen, he was firm, liberal, and patriotic; possessing in an eminent degree the confidence of his fellow-citizens to fill public stations; but preferring the quietude of private life, almost invariably declining in the turmoil of political life. He was one of the brightest and most popular of our citizens, and were most appreciated in the endearing relations of husband and father, none could be more affectionately beloved; and, as few men are ever more devotedly the esteem of their friends, so none ever died more sincerely mourned. Several weeks before his death, he was afflicted with a very aggravated and painful disease, which it may be truly said he bore "with Christian fortitude." He was ever conscious, for some time, of the approaching dissolution, and conversed calmly and cheerfully with his family and friends, concerning death and its consequences, with a calmness and resignation that disarmed it of its sting, and banished its dreaded horrors. His only regret was to be, that he was retained in this probationary existence to suffer the afflictions of his last and dying moments.
